Great Fast Reflections

Human & Environmental Development Program – Dr. Lesya Sabada

Part 1: The Problem: How can the Church respond to ecological challenges while maintaining a focus on the Great Fast? Christianity seeks to strengthen the Kingdom of God by promoting good thoughts and deeds, especially during the Great Fast. For Eastern Church focuses on the restoration of the image of God. It is not set of imperatives. The goal is the imitation of Christ. It's a mode of being that is most practical and of the highest quality.

How does this translate into an approach to environmental issues? The richness of Eastern Christian theology of creation and its potential for giving a sense of spiritual direction at a time of environmental challenge, have become much more widely recognized in recent years. The environmental crisis is symptomatic of a spiritual crisis. We must recognize that the Church engages with contemporary society in a very different way from any secular organization. Its concern is not with transforming structures but with transforming humanity. Transforming human beings means working on the inner self, wrestling with greed, selfishness, laziness, willful blindness and so forth, that distort my relationship with my Creator and creation alike. Paradoxically, this act of turning inward to work within oneself is also the bedrock of any social and structural change.

What's the Problem: Connected to this Eastern Christian view is the recognition of a problem with self-centeredness and evil imperfection within us. Self-centeredness is a bondage and a slavery. Sin is a block-out, a separation, a turning away from God to center on oneself. Humanity's course in life becomes centered on oneself.
